

The Christian Role in Arab Countries during the Middle Ages

Dr. Ali Ahmad *

Abstract

This research is about the positive attitudes that have been taken by the Christian citizens who influenced Arab countries during the Middle Ages, at all areas ruled by the Arabs in the west and the east. Christians played a role in all sides of the public life. In politics, they played an important role maintaining the stability and protecting the country. In economics, they played a big role developing industry trade and agriculture.

In science, they had a great role in many scientific fields, such as; medicine, pharmacy, agriculture, and engineering. They also played a great role in natural science, rationalism philosophy and science of discourse.

They also played an essential role in liberation wars against Persians in Iraq and Byzantines in Morocco and the Levant. Their positive role emerged best during the Frankish occupation in some areas of the Levant where they fought with all possible means.

As a conclusion, they were really positive social components.
