

Provisions of the real substitution in the insurance which is made by the partner in the common property

Amal Sharba
Department of Private Law
Faculty of Law
University of Damascus

Abstract

Used the Syrian legislature in connection with the insurance which is made by the partner in the common property, the principle of real substitution, the desire to stabilization of the transactions, to decide that the act remains true whatever the equivalent of the thing insured partner's share in a division. In spite of the principle of real substitution adopted by the legislature, but the creditor's right to the insured remains pending on the decision does not settle down for the duration of common, and may be his fate, move to the money other than the creditor wanted it from contracting with the partner.

And we will show in this research over the legal protection provided by the application of the principle of real substitution in estate insurance, and that through the study of the legal nature of the real substitution, and the impact of its application in estate insurance.